PRESSURE'S ON

OBAMA PUSHES FOR AN END TO 'DYSFUNCTIONAL GOVERNMENT'; REPUBLICAN LEADERS FIRE BACK

CNN

Congress is at a stalemate over raising the federal debt ceiling, and Americans need to pressure their elected representatives to work out a compromise that will avoid a potentially devastating default, President Obama told the nation Monday night.

In his seventh prime-time TV address, Obama sought to increase pressure for congressional leaders to reach a deal that would allow the government to continue borrowing money to pay its debts after Aug. 2.

The president singled out House Republicans for intransigence and said the political showdown is "no way to run the greatest country on Earth."

"The American people may have voted for divided government, but they didn't vote for a dysfunctional government," Obama said. "So I'm asking you all to make your voice heard. If you want a balanced approach to reducing the deficit, let your member of Congress know. If you believe we can solve this problem through compromise, send that message."

If Congress fails to raise the $14.3 trillion debt limit by Aug. 2, Americans could face rising interest rates and a declining dollar, among other problems. As the cost of borrowing rises, individual mortgages, car loans and student loans could become significantly more expensive.

Officials also warn that, without an increase in the debt limit, the federal government will not be able to pay all its bills next month. Obama recently indicated he could not guarantee Social Security checks would be mailed out on time.

Months of increasingly tense negotiations have failed to bring a deal that can win approval from all of the necessary players—the Republican-led House, Democratic-led Senate and the White House.

In his response to Obama's speech, House Speaker John Boehner (R-Ohio) said the president's proposals fail to deal with the fundamental problem: The nation spends more than it takes in.

"The sad truth is that the president wanted a blank check six months ago, and he wants a blank check today," Boehner said. "That is just not going to happen."

On Monday, Democratic and Republican congressional leaders unveiled separate new proposals that the other side quickly rejected, demonstrating the cavernous partisan divide that exists.

TICK TOCK

The U.S. Treasury will run out of money to pay its bills by Aug. 2. But Democratic and Republican lawmakers are nowhere near a deal to raise the $14.3 trillion debt limit that would allow the government to borrow funds and avoid default.

On average, the Treasury borrows $125 billion every month to meet Washington's financial obligations, such as interest on the country's debt and Social Security payments to elderly and disabled Americans.

Following are Treasury's spending commitments after the August deadline, according to the Bipartisan Policy Center. REUTERS

Hot wheels—and rails—on the CTA

Blame it on the rain. And the heat. And the antiquated system.

The CTA isn't having such a hot week. During Thursday evening rush hour, amid temperatures of 90 degrees, the CTA ran Red Line trains on a single track between the Cermak-Chinatown and the Sox-35th stations to allow crews to repair heat-damaged track.

Then on Saturday, the CTA ran Blue Line trains on a single track between the O'Hare and Rosemont stops because heavy rainfall affected the line's signal system.

Nevertheless, the CTA told Going Public it's prepared for heat waves. The agency said its personnel complete weekly inspections of track as part of routine maintenance.

A special track inspection is performed in the afternoon when the temperature exceeds 95 degrees with sunny skies before noon. The same inspection happens when the daily high temperature exceeds 85 degrees with sunny skies for three consecutive days or more, the CTA said.

When inspections indicate the rails may kink because of heat expansion, a water train sprays the tracks to cool them down and help prevent movement.

Meanwhile, the CTA said all its vehicles undergo an inspection of their air conditioning units before summer begins and before they go into service each day.

If the air conditioner malfunctions during a trip, that bus or rail car is taken out of service at the end of the line or route, the CTA said.

Buses are programmed to maintain a temperature of 72 degrees during the summer. If the air conditioning doesn't seem to be working on a bus or rail car, the CTA encourages riders notify the bus operator or customer assistant at the station.

Carlos Robles
LENNY GILMORE/REDEYE PHOTOS

IN THE MIDDLE

THEY DIDN'T CHOOSE TO COME HERE—NOW THEY JUST WANT TO BELONG

By Kyra Kyles

REDEYE

Carlos' face is wider and rounder, giving him a more youthful appearance, though, at 21, he is the eldest brother.

Twenty-year-old Rafael's face is angular and dimpled in at least two places when he smiles.

It's important to note the faces of the Robles brothers, as they sit side by side, in the downtown offices of their attorneys at the Heartland Alliance's National Immigrant Justice Center.

The two, parties in an immigration legal battle, are among the public faces of the DREAM Act debate that last month was introduced to a Senate committee after having been in the wings for a decade. The DREAM (Development, Relief and Education for Alien Minors) Act is a legislative proposal that would provide a path to citizenship for undocumented immigrants who arrive in the U.S. with their parents. In its most recent versions, it requires anyone seeking to stay in the country to meet some secondary and college education requirements as well as military obligations.

Opponents have described the measure, which has come in fits and starts for about 10 years, as amnesty for individuals living in the country illegally. They say undocumented students take resources from U.S. citizens and should not be allowed to remain in the country.

"Students brought here illegally by their illegal alien parents are lawbreakers as their parents are," said Kristen Williamson, a spokeswoman for the Federation for American Immigration Reform. "The best recourse for them is to go to back to their home country and use the skills they learned [in the U.S.] to be of help to their home country or apply to be re-admitted legally."

But supporters of DREAM, including its original 2001 sponsor, U.S. Sen. Dick Durbin (D-Ill.), say undocumented immigrant students deserve a path to legal residency or citizenship because they contribute to the country.

"The DREAM Act would make our country stronger by giving undocumented students a chance to earn legal status if they came here as children, are long-term U.S. residents, have good moral character and complete two years of college or military service in good standing," the senator's office said in a statement.

As of now, the students can be deported if they are found out. President Obama, who had promised to have an immigration bill in Congress within his first year in office, has so far not gotten momentum behind the act. During a speech to Latino voters Monday in Washington, D.C., the president said he "will keep up this fight," Reuters reported. The Illinois General Assembly has sent a state DREAM Act to Gov. Quinn which has not yet been signed.

"It can vary by situation, but for the most part there is no clear path to residency, let alone citizenship, if you are an undocumented immigrant," said immigration attorney Soh Yoon Atac, of Chicago-based Atom Law firm. Atac is not involved with the Robleses' case. "And it is really almost impossible if you do not come here through some kind of a visa and are, therefore, not inspected or admitted by a [U.S.] customs agent. That is a big no-no and if you are deported, you will likely not ever be able to return."

The Robleses—who attended Palatine High School and participated in sports and volunteering efforts—came here as tourists, and recent events have called into question their ability to

CHAIN REACTIONS

Where did the DREAM Act come from and where is it now on a federal level? RedEye provides a timeline of key moments in this proposal's history, dating back to 2001. K.K.

2001: The Development, Relief and Education for Alien Minors Act, now known as the DREAM Act, was introduced into the U.S. Senate by Dick Durbin (Ill.) and other lawmakers on both sides of the aisle.

2006: Senate Judiciary Committee approved the DREAM Act as an amendment to a bill focused on comprehensive immigration reform.

2007: Durbin filed to make the DREAM Act an amendment to the 2008 Department of Defense Authorization Bill. Opponents said the bill should not be tied to defense matters, despite the fact that it included a requirement that all males affected by the DREAM Act sign up for military selective service. Later that year, Durbin worked with two Republican lawmakers, who all tried unsuccessfully to get it passed.

live in the U.S. much longer. The brothers were raised in Mexico until the ages of 13 and 14 when their father obtained a six-month tourist visa and took his family to America.

The family, who live in Palatine, never returned to Mexico once that visa expired. That placed the brothers among the ranks of approximately 65,000 high school graduates per year who are undocumented immigrants, according to a National Immigration Law Center estimate.

Rafael and Carlos said their teen years were not much different from those of their friends in Palatine who were born and raised here. And their lives might have continued without incident had it not been for a chain of incidents that began about a year ago on Rafael's birthday.

"We never expected what happened to happen," Rafael said softly.

Carlos and Rafael were traveling by train last year to Harvard University to meet a friend from high school. On March 20, the Robleses were waiting in line for breakfast around 7 a.m. when they were approached by immigration officers who had boarded the train in Buffalo, N.Y.

One officer approached the brothers and asked if they were U.S. citizens.

"We said, 'No, we were Mexican citizens,'" Carlos recounted, with Rafael chiming in almost simultaneously with the same response. "It never occurred to us to lie about our status."

That candor cost the Robleses 24 hours in a detention facility, and then another day in a New York jail while former schoolteachers, coaches and their parents scrambled to secure their release.

"We thought they were going to put us on a plane and send us to Mexico right then and there," Carlos said. "Even after we got out, we were so scared of being deported. It is all we could think about."

Only last month did the brothers exit what they describe as a legal purgatory. In early June, their attorneys let them know they'd received a deferment on deportation proceedings.

As long as the Robleses keep up their grades, maintain employment and stay out of legal trouble, they can stay in the U.S. pending an official hearing on deportation. As part of the conditional arrangement, they must go through a renewal process once a year, one of their attorneys, Eleni Wolfe-Roubatis, told RedEye. The brothers are not out of the woods either, according to Atac but they are not being fast-tracked for removal from the country.

"It was like a burden off my shoulders," Carlos said.

"I felt relief more than anything," Rafael added. "I was just happy to be able to keep going to school, get a work permit and get a degree. We can get back to a normal life."

Normal life for Rafael is pursuing an architectural degree at UIC, where he was accepted after finishing two years at Harper College in Palatine. Carlos said he is excited to go from part time to full time at Loyola University, where he is studying secondary education.

The other thing the brothers are eager to do, they said, is speak up on behalf of other students who are counting on the DREAM Act to pass in order for them to continue their lives in the country they consider home. Durbin has taken up their cause.

"The Robles brothers are a great example of why the DREAM Act must become law," Durbin said through a statement. He pledged to keep fighting until DREAM is passed. "They were brought to the U.S. as children and grew up pledging allegiance to our flag and singing our national anthem."

Both young men now appreciate how easily that almost slipped between their fingers.

"When we first got arrested, I know a lawyer tried to tell my mom not to post our bond, but to give him $10,000 and he would get us out and get us citizenship," Carlos said. "It's not that easy, as a matter of fact, right now it's impossible for us to become legal citizens, and we learned that from this process. I'm so glad we had teachers who knew what to do and who to call. I don't know where we'd be."

2008: President Obama, then a Democratic contender for the White House, mentioned the DREAM Act in a campaign speech.

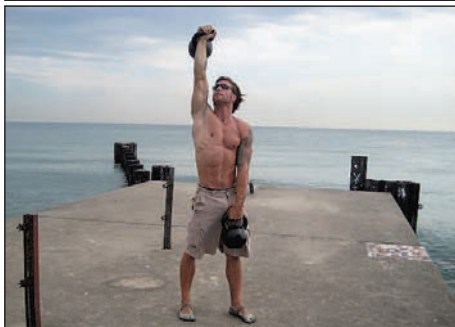

2009: The DREAM Act was reintroduced to Congress.

2010: Joint Committee on Taxation and Congressional Budget Office release report estimating the DREAM Act could reduce deficits by $1.4 billion during the next decade.

2011: In May, the DREAM Act was reintroduced to Congress but with a provision that the bill includes a critical provision that restores individual states' authority to gain information on students' residency to decide whether they are eligible for college benefits, including scholarships.

2011: In June, Durbin oversaw a DREAM Act hearing in the Senate.

Chicago's first protected bike lane at Kinzie and Jefferson streets Monday. E. JASON WAMBSGANS/TRIBUNE

A lane of their own Bikers applaud half-mile Kinzie Street addition

By Lynda Lopez

REDEYE

Chicago unveiled its first completed protected bicycle lane Monday as part of Mayor Emanuel's plan to make the city more bike-friendly.

The new lane, which separates cyclist traffic from vehicle traffic with soft posts, spans a half-mile stretch of Kinzie Street between Milwaukee Avenue and Wells Street and cost an estimated $140,000 to install.

Emanuel's administration has said the city plans to add 25 miles of bike lanes per year, for a total of 100 during his four-year term.

Last week, bicycles accounted for 48 percent of the morning rush-hour traffic on Milwaukee at Kinzie—about 820-890 vehicles, according to the city.

"I love the new bike lane," cyclist Marcus Hardaway of University Village said Monday. "I often feel unsafe on the road because drivers think the road only belongs to them. Adding protected bike lanes is a step in the right direction. I can't wait to see more in Chicago."

Melinda Braxton of Humboldt Park said she sometimes feels unsure on the road, but added she likes the new lane.

"I feel a whole lot safer now," she said.

Gerard Jamroz of Ravenswood said the bike lanes are an added benefit to the city, but they don't make him feel safer.

"The protected bike lanes are great. We should bring more to Chicago," Jamroz said. "But they don't make me feel safer. It appears safer, but you are still in danger from cars, buses and cabs. They can easily knock over the barriers. I would always wear my helmet regardless."

The next protected bike lane is expected to be added between Damen Avenue and Halsted Street on Jackson Street. Work on that lane is expected to begin in August.

Shooting suspect says he had help

OSLO, Norway The suspect in the deadliest attack in Norway since World War II has acknowledged carrying out the mass shooting and bombing and claims to have worked with two other cells, a judge said Monday.

Judge Kim Heger said the suspect, Anders Behring Breivik, acknowledges carrying out Friday's attacks, but has said they were necessary to prevent the "colonization" of the country by Muslims. Breivik accused the Labour Party, whose members were targets of the mass shooting, of "treason" for promoting multiculturalism, the judge said.

Police refused to release information about their investigation into the possibility that two cells aided Breivik, saying Monday that a court hearing was closed so as not to disclose any evidentiary information.

Other court officials have said they could not confirm the existence of the cells and referred questions to police.

Get ready for some football, Bears fans—the lockout is over

Chicago Tribune

The NHL locked out players for a full season because cash-strapped teams were melting down.

The NBA has enacted a lockout because clubs are hemorrhaging money.

The NFL shut its doors because owners and players couldn't agree on how to divide their riches.

The battle of the football haves and have-lots—one that elicited little public sympathy—effectively came to a close Monday when the player representatives for all 32 teams unanimously agreed to accept the league's proposal for a 10-year collective bargaining agreement.

"It's been a long time coming," NFL Commissioner Roger Goodell said. "Football is back, and that's great news for everybody."

The sides ended the longest work stoppage in league history and the first since the 1987 players strike.

The deal sorts through how the nation's most successful sports league will distribute its $9.3 billion in annual revenues; limits how much hitting players can do during the offseason, training camps and game weeks; distributes more money to veteran players and increases benefits to retired ones; and could help grease the skids for the league's eventual return to the L.A. market.

From a fan's perspective, the game won't change much this season. Other than the cancellation of the Aug. 7 Hall of Fame exhibition game and a condensed free-agency period, training camps will go on as planned. There will be limitations on how many times players can practice in pads and helmets, and top rookies will no longer be the richest people on the roster.

The new deal calls for the sides to split the league's total revenue, with owners getting 53 percent and players 47 percent—replacing a deal that was closer to 50-50.

Now that the lockout is over, Julius Peppers and the rest of the Bears can report to training camp Friday.

Sundays are fundays again

Monday morning's sunrise broke the horizon in an orange blaze of glory over Lake Michigan, reflected skyward by the good water of the Great Lake. I think a dog hugged a cat somewhere on Damen. Our world was at peace, and our autumn Sundays were secured for the next decade.

Football will indeed return for 31 NFL fan bases across America, plus whatever that is they have Sundays in St. Louis.

It was a close one, wasn't it? Admit it: You had to start thinking about alternate social plans for Sundays in September, October and November—good God, we almost had to deal with December and January weekends without pro football.

Hug your neighbor in thanks. Kiss that guy on the train. Or girl. Or both. We were thisclose to the first year of your adult life without a fantasy football draft.

I was worried about Hank Williams Jr. and all his rowdy friends. Would they find a new sport to support Monday nights? Would it inspire them to the same heights of rowdiness?

How the hell was ESPN going to fill all the hours of programming normally devoted to the NFL? MORE POKER. Let alone the poor bastards at NFL Network. I heard Rich Eisen was stockpiling bullets and bottled water in his bottom desk drawer. It would've broken bad for Michael Irvin, I think.

Instead of holding back your fandom to "teach those millionaires and billionaires a lesson," go the other way: have the balls-outiest football freak season of your life. Buy a Bears grill. Put a Bears grill cover on it. Grill some actual bear on it. You only live through 136-day work stoppages once. (Uh, right?)

And in case you forgot, the Bears were a touchdown away from the Super Bowl last year. They're not front-runners, but in today's NFL you just have to be good enough to sneak into the playoffs at 10-6. Just ask the Pa ... the Pac ... Green B—I can't type it. At least they won't be champions two years in a row.

Because the Bears will win Super Bowl XLVI. Book it. Done.

Bears leave Maynard out in the cold

The Bears have informed veteran punter Brad Maynard (above) that they intend to move on without him rather than signing the free agent to a new deal, according to a source close to the player. Maynard, 37, spent 10 seasons with the Bears after starting his career with the N.Y. Giants. He received the call from the Bears late Monday afternoon.

What's next?

The announcement of the agreement set in motion what is expected to be a flurry of activity. Here's what's ahead.

TUESDAY

League year begins. At 10 a.m., teams can sign 2011 draft picks and rookie free agents, have conversations with veteran free agents and make trades.

WEDNESDAY

Training camps start to open. Camps open on different days so every team has the same amount of practice time before its first preseason game. Ten more teams report Thursday, 10 more Friday and two on Sunday.

THURSDAY

Waiver period begins. Teams can begin terminating contracts at 4:01 p.m.

FRIDAY

- » Bears report to training camp at Olivet Nazarene University in Bourbonnais, Ill.
- » Full free agency begins at 6 p.m. Roster and option bonuses that would have been earned during the lockout will be paid if the player is on the roster at 4 p.m.

SATURDAY

Bears practice open to public, 3 p.m.

SUNDAY

Bears practice open to public, noon

AUG. 4

All clubs must be under the salary cap.

1 Why did it take so long for the Cubs to win three straight games?	I'm guessing it has something to do with House Republicans.	It's a marathon, not a sprint. Because it's certainly not baseball they're playing.	They just finally realized that the object is to win games.	Like an old man trying to climb out of bed, it often takes multiple tries—and the Cubs are very old.	Mike Quade just figured out how this whole managing thing works.
2 What's your wish for Chicago at baseball's trade deadline?	I'm picturing Randolph and Mortimer Duke yelling "Sell! Sell!" a bit too late.	Phil for a panelist to be named later.	That North Siders understand the Cubs are just a glorified minor-league team.	I wish Major League Baseball had rules in place that would allow a team to trade its front office.	Just to not get pantsed.
3 What's the first football thing you're going to do post-lockout?	Scott and Jerry do a football bit dressed as Lucy and Charlie Brown. And yes, they take turns as Lucy.	Fake a knee injury.	Drink a beer, eat a brat and kick a Packers fan.	I'm writing a letter to the commissioner petitioning that certain players (Benson, Wolfe, Vick) stay locked out.	Worry about the NBA lockout.
4 Who is unhappy the NFL lockout is over?	Police looking to make ticket quotas. Oh, like Cedric Benson and Hines Ward didn't happen.	Jesse Jackson is usually the correct answer.	Cubs fans. They don't understand this is a Bears town.	Businesses across America are lamenting the loss of man-hours as folks fill out their fantasy rosters.	Scott. He's got Brett Favre as QB in his keeper fantasy league. Good luck, B.
5 What's worse than losing 15 straight baseball games?	Fifteen episodes of a Cutler-Cavallari reality show. Crisis averted!	Finding 15 games after you just bought replacements.	A) Being a Cubs fan. B) Not winning a World Series in 103 years.	Waking up in the morning and remembering that you play (or cheer) for the Cubs.	Being a fan of the team losing 15 straight baseball games.

Do or die for Sox

How they do this week will determine the team's future for the season

With the White Sox 4½ games out of first place in the AL Central entering Monday's game, general manager Ken Williams expressed the need to win the three-game series against Detroit to avoid what could be a sell-off before Sunday's 3 p.m. trading deadline.

"Certainly we need to wait and get on the other side of this Detroit series," Williams said Monday.

This marks the first time since 2007 that the Sox at least faced the possibility of trading experienced players at the deadline. Asked about a St. Louis Post-Dispatch report stating that the Sox were interested in acquiring outfielder Colby Rasmus in a deal involving

WHITE SOX 6, DETROIT 3

» Pena out for season: Reliever Tony Pena said he's out for the season and will fly to Southern California this week to undergo surgery on his right elbow.

Edwin Jackson or Matt Thornton and a minor-league player, Williams said the story, "as reported, is incorrect."

Nevertheless, "there are some very interesting deals," Williams said. "We have some very popular players." Williams said the players, not the front office, ultimately will dictate the direction the Sox turn before Sunday's deadline.

Williams said this Sox team has been the most difficult to read because of their unfilled potential, yet the Sox are 38-30 since May 5.

"I'm not going to try and pretend with you guys that I have any answers," Williams said. "You guys have been watching this team all year. Anybody got any answers? If you do, speak up."

Williams added that he has no answers, just:

"A lot of questions. A lot of questions for me, a lot of questions for them. It is what it is. At the end of the day, I'm the one that puts everyone in uniform, and I will fall on the sword."

» The Sky signed shooting guard Eshaya Murphy to a seven-day contract, coach and general manager Pokey Chatman announced in a statement released Monday.

MOUTHWATCH

"And so once again I want to congratulate this team and wish them all the best of luck in the rest of the season—unless the White Sox are in the World Series—which right now is not a sure thing."

STOP WORRYING ABOUT MONEY!

COMING TO THE CHICAGO AREA ON AUGUST 2ND-4TH

I believe what is happening to our economy right now is NOT a "normal" cycle of recession, but a radical change that could wipe out the Middle Class and leave us with a society of only rich and poor.

DO YOU WANT TO BE RICH OR POOR? NOW YOU HAVE THE POWER TO CHOOSE

A crisis like this is really your biggest opportunity because all the losers give up. And the playing field is left wide open to people who understand "The New Rules of Money." The winners will be people like you. That's what my Rich Dad Education™ training team will show you at a FREE "Learn to Be Rich" Workshop.

DON'T PANIC - GET PREPARED!

What this current recession has made crystal clear is that the rich have an unfair advantage, because it's not what they HAVE — it's what they KNOW that matters. The good news is that you can put this same unfair advantage to work for you!

When Zac Efron and Seth Rogen collide in a party hearty flick, only one can emerge victorious

By Dana Moran | REDEYE

Prepare to pledge! Zac Efron and Seth Rogen are set to star in an as-yet-untitled fraternity comedy, deadline.com reports. Efron will play exactly to type as the member of an alpha-male frat, and Rogen will play somewhat departed from type as his grouchy next-door neighbor, according to avclub.com. Since this rivalry surely will come down to a battle to the death, we pitted these two against each other in a completely unscientific faceoff based on our other favorite fratty flicks. DAMORAN@TRIBUNE.COM

Panty raiding "Revenge of the Nerds"

Efron: He might've played innocent in his Disney Channel days, but one look from Efron brings out the lady drawers these days.

Rogen: Don't write him off just because of the mop top. After all, he did, um, knock up Katherine Heigl in "Knocked Up."

WINNER Efron. The teens just aren't screaming for Rogen in the same way.

Hijacking a parade float "National Lampoon's Animal House"

Efron: "High School Musical" antics aside, the wildest thing we've ever seen him do is get poison oak.

Rogen: Remember that one time when he and McLovin' blew up a cop car in "Superbad"? Yeah, that was awesome.

WINNER Rogen. Efron needs to work on his appetite for destruction.

KY jelly wrestling "Old School"

Efron: Are you joking? His precious hair isn't going ANYWHERE near that kiddie pool of slime!

Rogen: This would be almost as bad as seeing Will Ferrell in that "SNL" giant baby sketch. Shudder

WINNER Draw

Slacking "Van Wilder"

Efron: His only movie out this year might be the saccharine "New Year's Eve," but he's got plenty of projects in the works, including "The Paperboy," which to our chagrin is not about the video game.

Rogen: Contrary to his weed-smoking movie image, Rogen actually has FIVE films coming out this year.

WINNER Efron. Rogen's movies involve doing the voices of a praying mantis and an alien—not exactly rough stuff.

Throwing a party Every frat movie in history

Efron: Based on the company he keeps, this party would be full of Vanessa Hudgens, Ashley Tisdale and strippers. Not too shabby.

Rogen: Seriously, his buds and frequent co-stars are actually known as "The Frat Pack." Need we say more?

WINNER Rogen. Really, which of these guys would you rather get crazy with in real life?

OVERALL WINNER

Rogen. Sorry, Zac, you're going to have to get up a lot earlier in the morning to keep up with this seasoned hijinks pro.

Way to go, dawg

After months of negotiations, it appears Jennifer Lopez is close to signing a deal that would bring her back for another season on "American Idol," the Wall Street Journal reports. Lopez was paid $12 million for her services on the show this year. Time for a raise, perhaps?

Whoa, doctor

Some actors just can't quit the soaps. That list includes James Franco, who is returning for a fourth stint on "General Hospital" in September, tvguide.com reports. He first appeared on the soap in 2009 and will return for a "long-term" storyline, according to the website.

Skin deep

Turns out the red patches on Kim Kardashian's legs are not, as her sister Khloe suggested, ringworm. On Sunday's episode of "Keeping Up With the Kardashians," Kim learned she has psoriasis, a common skin disease. "My career is doing ad campaigns and swimsuit photo shoots. ... Imagine what the tabloids would do to me if they saw all these spots," Kim said. Ah, celebs—they're nothing like us.

Best (secret) buds

Can you tell Justin Timberlake how to get to Sesame Street? The "Friends With Benefits" star and Esquire writer Chris Jones, who is profiling him for the mag, went incognito Thursday at Comic-Con in San Diego. Their costumes of choice? Ernie for Timberlake and Bert for Jones, who tweeted that Elmo and Cookie Monster also were available, but the pair "thought Bert and Ernie made for better bonding."

Yes, the fact that Kanye West and Jay-Z announced Monday that they have named their collaborative group The Throne reeks of ego. But yes, we still want to go to their joint concerts, set for Oct. 6 and 7 at the United Center. The Throne's debut album, "Watch the Throne," drops Aug. 8 on iTunes, coinciding with the day general tickets go on sale. In fact, peasants—er, fans—who buy tickets online also will get a digital copy of the album. Let them eat cake.

That's how many times M.I.A.'s song "27" had been streamed Monday evening since she released it Saturday in the hours after Amy Winehouse's death. The song is "dedicated to all my friends that died at 27," according to M.I.A.'s account on soundcloud.com.
